

Code of Conduct

Owner: Compliance | Version: 3.0-rag | Effective date: 2026-04-20

Document type	Synthetic policy manual
Use case	RAG training, retrieval benchmarking, QA evaluation
Chunking guidance	Use one chunk per section and preserve section IDs

1. Purpose and Scope

Code of Conduct describes the formal policy requirements and operating procedures used by Northstar Analytics Ltd.. It is written as a synthetic but realistic document for training retrieval, summarization, and question-answering systems.

This document applies to all employees, interns, temporary workers, and approved contractors unless a section explicitly states otherwise.

Managers are responsible for enforcing this policy consistently and for escalating unusual cases to the document owner.

2. Roles and Responsibilities

Employees must read, understand, and follow the policy requirements relevant to their role.

Managers must document exceptions in writing and retain approvals in the designated system of record.

The document owner reviews this policy at least annually and whenever business, legal, or technical requirements materially change.

3. Ethical Conduct

The section on ethical conduct defines the standard rule, the approval path, and the records that must be retained.

Requests related to ethical conduct should be submitted through the official workflow rather than handled informally through chat or email alone.

When a manager grants an exception for ethical conduct, the exception must include the reason, the duration, and any compensating controls.

Records related to ethical conduct must be stored in the designated repository with a clear owner and retention period.

Metrics related to ethical conduct should be reviewed periodically to identify recurring issues and opportunities for improvement.

4. Conflicts Of Interest

The section on conflicts of interest defines the standard rule, the approval path, and the records that must be retained.

Requests related to conflicts of interest should be submitted through the official workflow rather than handled informally through chat or email alone.

When a manager grants an exception for conflicts of interest, the exception must include the reason, the duration, and any compensating controls.

Records related to conflicts of interest must be stored in the designated repository with a clear owner and retention period.

Metrics related to conflicts of interest should be reviewed periodically to identify recurring issues and opportunities for improvement.

5. Gifts And Hospitality

The section on gifts and hospitality defines the standard rule, the approval path, and the records that must be retained.

Requests related to gifts and hospitality should be submitted through the official workflow rather than handled informally through chat or email alone.

When a manager grants an exception for gifts and hospitality, the exception must include the reason, the duration, and any compensating controls.

Employees may not accept cash or cash equivalents from vendors or customers under any circumstances.

Non-cash gifts with an estimated value above USD 75 must be declined or disclosed to Compliance for written guidance.

6. Reporting Concerns

The section on reporting concerns defines the standard rule, the approval path, and the records that must be retained.

Requests related to reporting concerns should be submitted through the official workflow rather than handled informally through chat or email alone.

When a manager grants an exception for reporting concerns, the exception must include the reason, the duration, and any compensating controls.

Concerns may be reported to a manager, People Operations, Compliance, or the anonymous ethics channel.

Retaliation against a person who raises a good-faith concern is prohibited even if the concern is not substantiated.

7. Non-Retaliation

The section on non-retaliation defines the standard rule, the approval path, and the records that must be retained.

Requests related to non-retaliation should be submitted through the official workflow rather than handled informally through chat or email alone.

When a manager grants an exception for non-retaliation, the exception must include the reason, the duration, and any compensating controls.

Records related to non-retaliation must be stored in the designated repository with a clear owner and retention period.

Metrics related to non-retaliation should be reviewed periodically to identify recurring issues and opportunities for improvement.

8. Exceptions and Escalations

Exceptions must be rare, time-bound, and approved by the designated authority named in the relevant section.

All exceptions must be logged with the approver, rationale, expiration date, and any required follow-up actions.
